

It is extremely important to not only me, but my family & many others I know, to have access to homeopathic medicines in Australia, and to have the right to choose this natural form of healthcare.

I have been using homeopathy for my family since having children over 10yrs ago & it has personally brought me through some pretty serious health conditions such as glandular fever & adrenal fatigue. The benefits of it that I've seen in my children's health is astounding too. I couldn't speak highly enough of it!

I have immunized my 3 youngest children homeopathically which has been very effective. After many health problems/issues with our oldest child who we immunised as per the Australian immunisation standards, we decided to look at other alternatives. Our 3 children who we took a more natural approach for have been considerably healthier & had a much stronger immune system. I actually don't think any of them have hardly had a visit to the doctor or ever been on anti-biotics! The difference in immune strength compared to our oldest child is incredible. And our oldest child was the one with asthma / eczema etc.

I strongly support Option 1, and am strongly not in favour of Option 4.

I believe this is important for the future of our healthcare & also having the right to choose the path we wish to travel down when it comes to this topic. This right to healthcare should not be taken away from us.
